Today's health care environment requires people to rely heavily upon health communications in order to make health care decisions and take appropriate action. Research demonstrates that health information is extremely complex. We undertook this project to better understand how we can tailor our communications to the abilities, needs, and preferences of health care consumers.

Authors: Steven R. Rush, MA, LP and David Mucha